Reflection #4

After our group meeting with our partners at JJKFAN, I feel that our group has a better understanding of the expectations of our project. With the development of the site and our relationship with our partners, the initial goals of the project have both pivoted and maintained the same in equal measure. Despite this, I feel that we have realized the full potential of the project and have worked towards a fully realized final product.

When we first began working on our project, we struggled with instability and confusion with regard to the goals of the project. Due to circumstances outside of our control, we could not begin developing our project until proper government funds were available.

Despite this, we began to research the numerous aspects of the site and how the factors interact. This research assisted in the development of a general plan for the site that we began to develop. Keeping in contact with our partners at JJKFAN, we were able to contribute to the development of the site despite the instability. After funding was allocated, we were able to implement our research into the site and begin applying our knowledge into the plan.

Our team has been one of the most stable groups within CODES; having a smooth and complete research process throughout the past 4 years. We have a good understanding of both our own strengths and weaknesses, utilizing our skillsets to the best of our abilities and producing a successful project in turn. Our experience with JJKFAN has been smooth and successful, with both of our programs benefiting from the research we have conducted. As we further develop the site, we continue to build upon the research we produced last semester and add the final touch to the project.
