Dr. Martinez

After talking things over with my team and coming up with questions about what I want to know, I've decided that I will be doing a few content videos for my project. I will be asking at least two boys and two girls questions on why they've come out to the site and what they've gained from being there and if they've gained anything, how can they get others like friends and family to get engaged like them.

On site, my plans for the semester will be to engage young adults in water conservation using content videos. The reason being is because a lot of young adults nowadays use their phones to get daily "news" information. Using these videos and making them interesting and attention grabbing could possibly be a way to get young adults engaged. During this process I don't think I'll have many obstacles and if I do run into any, I know that my partners would be excited to help due to their excitement. I know a possible barrier I could have when trying to build trust with the people who will be included in my videos is getting their consent and letting them know that this is a safe place. I will give the energy that I would like in return to give them that safe space.
